

Spencer Burke Published In DePaul Law Review

Spencer B. Burke, Senior Counsel at St. Louis Trust & Family Office, wrote an essay detailing what lawyers can learn about family business from HBO's Emmy-winning series Succession. His piece was published in the Spring 2024 issue of the DePaul Law Review Journal.

Spencer teaches a MBA-level course on family business at the Olin Business School at Washington University in St. Louis. His course, entitled "Ownership Insights: The Strategic Advantages of Family and Employee-Owned Firms," covers the evolution of founder-led firms to multi-generational family businesses.

The DePaul Law Review is a scholarly journal published four times a year by students at DePaul University College of Law. The Law Review serves as a forum for practitioners, judges, professors, and law students to discuss and analyze important topics in the law. The DePaul Law Review was organized in 1951. Throughout the years, the members of the DePaul Law Review have remained committed to fostering pure and intellectual research.
